

TRALEE DISTRICT COURT.

Case Against Carlow Man Dismissed.

SUSPENSORY SENTENCE FOR ASSAULT.

At the Tralee District Court on Friday, before Mr. R. D. F. Johnson, D.J.,

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE ACT.

Garda Campbell had a number of parents summoned for failure to send their children to school regularly.

Thomas Jackman, Bishop Street, Carlow, was charged with conveying 21 calves in a lorry in such a position as to cause the calves unnecessary suffering.

Garda Fitzpatrick said that he inspected the lorry at Edward Street, Tralee, on the 14th June. There were in all 31 calves in the lorry.

To Mr. Downing, who appeared for the defence, witness said it was a common practice for lorrys to come down to Tralee for calves.

Mr. Alexander Donald said that on the 14th June he saw the lorry referred to. He drew defendant's attention to the state of the lorry where calves were packed like sardines.

Defendant said he lived in Tullog, Carlow. He was for several years trading as a cattle dealer.

Defendant said he was taking the calves to Tullog. He bought them in the Fair Green and as he bought them they were shoved into the lorry.

To Superintendent Kelliher, defendant said some of the calves had been injured in the lorry about twenty minutes before Mr. Donald came along.

Mr. Collins, Abbeyfeale, said he was with defendant on the 14th of June and was present when Mr. Donald made some objection to the way the calves were packed.

U.S.A. SUGGESTS GIGANTIC SCHEME TO CANADA

If Canada agrees to the proposals of the U.S.A. and bears half the estimated cost, 543 million dollars, the St. Lawrence river will be deepened, a canal constructed and a giant high-power station established, and the result will enable ocean going liners to enter the Lakes between the two countries.

GERMANY CLAIMS AIR RECORD.

Berlin, Friday.

A new international air record is claimed to-day for a German light aeroplane, which flew 1,000 kilometres (approximately 625 miles) at an average speed of 218.77 kilometres per hour (approximately 137 miles per hour).

The maximum permissible engine for these light aeroplanes is four litres, and it is pointed out that with them a non-stop flight of 625 miles has hitherto been impracticable.

The flight was witnessed by members of the International Aeronautical Society, and will be submitted for official recognition by the International Aeronautic Federation.

LESSON IN HORSE SENSE.

The Ways of Men in War.

WHAT IS IT ALL ABOUT?

STORY WITH A MORAL.

DURING the course of the next war, which, as you all know, will be positively one of the very last wars to end all wars, a rain-soaked trooper was standing beside his rain-soaked horse in the half-shelter of a ruined barn wondering what to do next.

The trooper had a horse because one of the Very Best Brains in the Highest Command had remembered that a horse can go of itself, which was more than the mechanised forces could do because all the fuel had long ago been used up or blocked.

And presently this horse, a very superior and intelligent animal, shook himself and gave a long sigh, and spoke, and what he said was: "Man—Trooper—Boss—whatever you like to be called, do tell me for the love of Mike that this war business is all about."

The soldier looked at him in astonishment, thinking that among all the rummy things that had ever happened to him, this was quite the rummier, and he said: "Well, if this doesn't beat the band! I didn't know you could talk!"

"Like a good many other animals," replied the horse, "I can, but believe it expedient not to. You would have been a lot better off if you had never started, wouldn't you? Oh, not you personally, of course, old man," he added, nuzzling his soft nose into the soldier's arm.

"I mean Men in general," replied the soldier, with a sigh. "I believe we would. But you know the first duty of a humble soldier is not to ask questions, only to obey commands, and I suppose the same rule applies to soldiers' horses, although to the best of my knowledge there is no mention of it in standing orders."

"If you start asking what the war is about you'll be asking next why we don't stop it, and then where are you? If soldiers or soldiers' horses get asking why don't we stop, it's as good as a mutiny almost, and you know what the penalty is for mutiny, don't you?"

"Yes," said the horse. "I've seen it. You get shot neck and dead, quickly, by a lot of your friends, who are really sorry for you and know the best thing they can do is to aim straight and steady. Much worse than being killed a bit at a time by ragged lumps of cast iron out of a shell which might only carve a couple of legs or best part of your tummy away."

"I'll risk the punishment, I think, and go on asking questions, if you don't mind. After all, you wouldn't split on me, would you?" "Not me," said the soldier. "But I don't know that I can tell you much. You know, of course, that we didn't start the war, so of course we can't stop it."

"Why?" repeated the soldier, vaguely. "Why? Well, of course we couldn't. What would become of civilization if we did?" "I can't think what will become of civilization if you don't," answered the horse, in a slightly condescending manner which the soldier did not quite like.

No Lord of Creation likes to be spoken to condescendingly by a quadruped, however intelligent. "We can't stop it," he tried to explain, "because if we did the Blue Army would say, 'Ha-Ha! We've won!' That would be intolerable and degrading, wouldn't it?" "Would it?" asked the horse.

"And they would come into our land and overrun it, and ravish our wives and sweethearts and kill our little babies and burn our towns." "Wouldn't they rather go home?" asked the horse. "I hear you chaps grumbling all day on the quiet, saying how glad you will be when the ruddy war is over and you can go home. You don't say you will be glad because you can go and ravish and kill and burn in the Blue Land."

"Why, of course we don't," answered the soldier, indignantly. "We Green soldiers never do anything like that. We only bring peace and enlightenment and liberation in our train."

"How curious," said the horse, neighing a sharp, quiet, little neigh like a laugh. "I was talking to one of the Blue horses we captured last week, and he said their bosses were pretty decent sorts and were only fighting to keep the Green barbarians from ravishing their sweethearts and wives and killing their little babies and burning their towns."

"Ridiculous," said the soldier.

"That's Propaganda, that is. Lies. A most insidious and dishonest kind of weapon. We would not say anything unless it was absolute truth."

"Why?" asked the horse. The soldier shook the rain off his cap irritably, and said: "Don't keep asking 'Why?' like that. You're worse than a child. If you'd been to school you would know that there is an imaginary line called the Frontier, which divides the Green land from the Blue, and all of us who are born on this side of the line are clean-minded, honest, noble, peace-loving and law-abiding Christians—every one of us without exception."

"And that our history is one long, uninterrupted chain of glorious and peaceful conquest in which we have never sought anything but the liberation of the oppressed and the enlightenment of the benighted."

"Those born on the other side of the line are, on the other hand, and also without exception, dull, brutal, bloody-minded savages, whose wars have always been unjust, marked by atrocity, and promoted only by the greed of gain."

At this the horse remained silent for a moment, as though trying to get these facts into his mind. Then he said: "I hardly like to mention it, old man, but that Blue horse, if he don't bore you with the repetition of his name, was saying that the Blue Land people were taught exactly the same thing, only the other way round, of course."

"Which just proves," the soldier concluded triumphantly, "that they are all liars and cheats, just as I've been telling you."

"I suppose it does," said the horse. Just then an officer came galloping by, through the darkness and the mud, and seeing the soldier, reigned in his horse and saying: "What the blazes are you doing there? Don't you know we're in action? The signal for your company went half an hour ago."

"I didn't hear it," said the soldier. "I'm very sorry. I was talking"; and he told the whole story.

The officer did not believe a word of it, of course, and the horse, who must have been frightened by the smattering of education the soldier had given him, could not be prevailed upon to utter a single word more, but he neighed his quiet little neigh which was so very much like a laugh.

So they all agreed that the soldier was drunk on duty, and they took him back to the base, where he was decently shot by a firing party who were really sorry for him, and aimed straight and steady.

So it did not make much difference after all.
